Sometimes, the best outdoor games for kids are low on rules or regulations and high on imagination. Think: classic games like four square, steal the bacon, h-o-r-s-e, and others that bring back memories of long summer days, pre-screens, when bored kids had to create their own fun.

allowed, children of the 1950s played games
like tag, hide and seek,
leap frog, marbles and hopscotch. Leap frog
involved kids lining up, bending down, and
jumping over each other in a row.

Hopscotch required
sidewalk chalk, but other than that cost
nothing.

But many might recall the days when children congregated outdoors, playing their favourite games in the street. They were free and required little or no equipment. Apart from being fun, they also helped build fundamental skills, from social interaction to physical hand-eye co-ordination and even basic maths and strategic thinking.
