The No Child Left Behind movement seemed to discount the importance of play-based learning in favor of more explicit instruction and testing in the lower grades. But researchers and educators agree that play is a critical part of childhood learning that should not be sidelined. Here's a look at the latest research on the importance and impact of play-based learning.

Play-based Learning: The Concept of Kids Learning by ...

Play and learning can not be divided during the earliest years because as children are finding out about what things do when they touch them and what they can do when sitting, crawling, cruising, clambering, climbing, standing, reaching, pulling, pushing and so on they are also gaining mastery and control of their bodies – so play is learning. At the same time the sounds and words and gestures that they have experienced in interactions with others help babies to understand ways of relating ...

Play & Learning - Early Years Matters

When children play they are learning. Children who engage in play and playful learning do better in academic subjects than do their peers who play less. The work cementing this relationship, however, is just beginning to emerge and, at this point, relationships between play and learning are largely based on correlational evidence.

Importance of play for children I Starting Blocks

Some kids struggle with learning how to play with their peers. Play isn't always easy for everyone. The goal would always be to have children be able to play and interact without adult support. But for some, that's not realistic. For those kids who struggle, they'll need additional adult scaffolding until they can play on their own.
