It may have been Claude Monet (1840–1926) who kick-started the trend, wintering in Antibes in 1888 and portraying dozens of versions of the local landscape. But other prominent painters soon followed. Important post-Impressionist Paul Cézanne (1839–1906) was born, raised, and lived most of his life in Aix-en-Provence. He adopted the short brush strokes, love of landscape, and light color palette of his Impressionist friends, eventually creating artworks that laid the foundations for Cubism.
